

A close-up photograph of several yellow crocus buds emerging from the ground. The buds are bright yellow and pointed, surrounded by long, thin green leaves. The background is a dark, out-of-focus ground surface.

the crocuses are breaking ground – the snowdrops splitting into bells with silent bell tones magicking
the sun-infested atmosphere –

bushtits dart the budding trees while finches search for nesting twigs as earth's spring fashion a stage for souls of love to dance again.
